U. S. Provides Expert To Help Israeli Cattle Ranchers

Israel is developing a type of range animal that can withstand the blazing heat and thrive on the sparse grass. Before Palestine was partitioned, the beef cattle there were small black Arab types that had been raised in this area since Biblical times.

The Israelis have been cross-breeding these cattle with beef animals from Turkey and Yugoslavia. Smaller herds of Brahman cattle from India and Santa Gertrudis cattle from the King Ranch in Texas have also been mixed with the local Arab breeds.

Most of Israel's beef grazing lands are in the north, on the rocky hills a few miles from the Sea of Galilee, says the New York Times. Other ranges have been established in Western Galilee, near the Lebanese border and in the Lachish region north of Beersheba. Altogether only 700,000 acres of range land are available in Israel.

The total grazing land in Israel would not fill a corner of a West Texas county, but Israel has made a modest start on a beef cattle industry. While Britain governed Palestine under a mandate of the League of Nations the beef cattle in this area were almost entirely owned and tended by Palestinian Arabs.

In 1948 thousands of these cattle were scattered and driven out of Israel by the refugees who fled with them. When Israel became a state there were few left.

Today, after eleven years of careful nurturing, there are 35,000 head of beef cattle on Israeli farm settlements. Within the next ten years, if the Government's planning works out, there will be at least 100,000.

Israel's borders with her Arab neighbors are still not tightly sealed. There are frequent thefts of livestock. Israel's cow hands, like the cowboys of America's old Wild West, seldom go about their business unarmed. But their more mundane operations are the same as those of cattle ranchers in the United States.

To help Israel's new cowboys learn these techniques, the United States Operation Mission has provided the services of L. R. Short, a Californian who has spent twenty years in the Department of Agriculture as a specialist in range research. A school has been established at Tabgha on the Sea of Galilee. There Mr. Short and his assistants conduct courses in such fundamentals as range fence-building (there have been none in Israel until now), spraying and branding, and building corrals, feeding sheds, and loading pens.

The per capita consumption of beef in Israel is about twenty-one pounds a year, says the New York Times. In the United States it is more than eighty. An important reason for the low consumption is that the Israeli housewife has to pay the equivalent of $1.55 for a pound of unfatted beef.

Israel Wants That Impounded Mail Back From Egypt

Israel asked the Universal Postal Union in Berne, Switzerland, to recover mail impounded by the United Arab Republic in the Suez Canal. The mail was reported to have been seized in Port Said. The Norwegian freighter "Tarn" was said to have been redirected and she put off about 160 sacks of postal matter for various countries. The Egyptians confiscated eight sacks of Israel-consigned mail from Australia.

A box containing Australian equipment and literature for the Israeli meteorological service was reported impounded at Port Said from another Norwegian ship, the "Targoff," says the New York Times. The latest incidents came at a time when the Israeli Foreign Ministry was considering representations to the United States, Britain and other maritime powers urging them to make strong declarations in the United States General Assembly reaffirming the principle of freedom of navigation through the canal.

The representations are connected with the United Arab Republic's seizure of the Danish ship "Inge Toft" carrying Israeli cement and potash for Far Eastern ports. The ship is still at Port Said.

Foreign Minister Golda Meir said last month at Jerusalem that Israel would not accept any conditions that would qualify the right to send Israeli cargoes through the Suez Canal in foreign-owned ships. She said Israel still insisted that Egypt must obey the rulings of the United Nations Security Council on free passage through the canal.

"The Government of Israel does not accept the principle that Nasser has any right to put forward any conditions to anybody as to free and innocent passage through Suez," Mrs. Meir asserted at a news conference recorded for broadcast by the Government radio station.

Mrs. Meir's statement indicated that Israel was rejecting, for the moment at least, a compromise formula that Dag Hammarskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations, evolved during conferences with Egyptian officials in Cairo last June.

The "Inge Toft," a Danish ship loaded with Israeli cement and potash, has been tied up at Port Said since May 21, says the New York Times. The Egyptians refused to permit the vessel to transit the canal. They ordered the cargo unloaded. Since the captain refused to do so, the ship has had to remain in Port Said.

The formula submitted by Mr. Hammarskjold would, among other provisions, require all Israeli cargoes bound for the canal to be purchased by their receivers before they left Haifa instead of after they arrived at the buyer's port. The Egyptians also insisted that no publicity be given on the sailing of any foreign ship, carrying an Israeli cargo, that intended to use the canal.

In the weeks since this formula was offered the Israeli Government has repeatedly discussed the matter without taking any action on it. Meanwhile, Israel has been continuing her "diplomatic offensive" to pursuade seafaring nations to try to induce President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab

U. S. Jewish Group Leaders Ask To Speak To Krushchev On Visit In First Such Concerted Effort

American Jewish organizations have announced formation of a conference aimed at arranging a meeting of American Jewish leaders with Soviet Prime Minister Nikita S. Khruschev when he visits the U. S. this month.

The conference, which includes representatives of the three religious divisions of American Jewry, along with Jewish labor, veterans, women's groups, Zionists and fraternal groups, "is one of the most representative organizations of American Jewry ever formed," Yehuda Hellman, of the Jewish Agency for Israel, said.

However, the only major Jewish organization that did not join the conference was the influential American Jewish Committee, a non-Zionist but pro-Israel organization that seeks to protect the rights of Jews throughout the world, says the New York Herald Tribune. However, Dr. John Slawson, executive vice-president of the group, said the Committee was working with the new conference which has Philip M. Klutznick, of Park Forest, Ill., as chairman.

United States Jewish leaders have frequently voiced concern over what they have reported was the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries. The impending visit of Mr. Khrushchev motivated the joint action by the Jewish groups. It is the first time that a concerted effort has been made in such a matter by these Jewish groups.

Mr. Klutznick, former president of Bnai Brith, the 116-year-old Jewish service organization, is prominently identified with American Jewish activities. He attended the meeting in New York soon after his arrival from Europe, where he had been taking a vacation and had attended the World Jewish Congress meeting in Stockholm.

Leaders of the Jewish groups, who banded together, are the heads of Jewish fraternal, Zionist, and non-Zionist groups, as well as the lay religious organizations of the three branches of Judaism — Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform.

It was learned by the New York Times that the conference would name a subcommittee to arrange the details for the possible meeting with Mr. Khrushchev. The subcommittee will be empowered to appoint those who would attend such a meeting.

Early this year, leaders of the American Jewish Committee, an agency devoted to combating bigotry and discrimination and safeguarding the religious and civil rights of Jews, discussed the status of Soviet Jews with Anastas I. Mikoyan, a first Deputy Premier, who was visiting the United States.

Last month the Committee warned in a report that Soviet policy "threatened the extinction of the Jewish religion and culture in vast regions of the earth." Leaders of the newly organized conference are trying to enlist the cooperation of the American Jewish Committee for the meeting with Mr. Khruschev.

The American Jewish Congress recently exhibited photographs that purported to show the desecration of Jewish cemeteries and synagogues in the Soviet Union that had occurred within the last year.

While the recent World Jewish Congress Stockholm meeting was in session, there were reports circulated at the United Nations that Mr. Khrushchev would be "delighted" to meet a delegation of American Jews on his visit to discuss the plight of the estimated 3,000,000 Jews in Russia. A spokesman for the Russian U. N. delegation has confirmed the earlier report, saying: "I know he (Mr. Khrushchev) has nothing against such a meeting."

There have been numerous reports in the Western press recently of anti-Semitic policies on the part of the Russian government, says the New York Herald Tribune. From Stockholm, Mr. Klutznick and Rabbi Joachim Prinz, of Newark, N. J., president of the American Jewish Congress, cabled Vice-President Nixon, asking him to arrange a meeting between Mr. Krushchev and an American delegation, according to an American Jewish Congress spokesman.

It was indicated that the conference would deal with two specific questions: Selection of a delegation to meet with Mr. Krushchev; scheduling the time and place of an actual meeting. Mr. Klutznick went to Washington for

Synagogue Council Head Cites Revival Of Religious Life

Jewish religious life has increased "in breadth and depth" since World War II and everything points to a continuance of the trend, the president of the Synagogue Council of America told the New York Herald Tribune. Rabbi Max D. Davidson, aged sixty years, who in June was named president of the Council for a two-year period, declared in an interview at Council offices in New York that the present-day religious revival among Jews goes "far beyond the surface" of building programs and attendance records.

The Council represents 2,400 Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform synagogues with 2,100 rabbis organized in six constituent bodies. They are the Rabbinical Council of America, Rabbinical Assembly of America, Central Conference of American Rabbis, Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, United Synagogue of America and the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

"Individuals and families are turning more and more to synagogues and rabbis on a local level than they have ever done in America," Rabbi Davidson observed. "Communities and organizations are turning more and more to Jewish national religious bodies for moral and ethical guidance in situations where previously they might have turned elsewhere."

Another manifestation of the trend, he said, is in the desire of individuals, communities, and organizations to ally themselves with their religious groupings. Jewish leaders in non-religious fields, also, are "volunteering to accept responsibilities in religious activities" where previously they devoted themselves largely to political, charitable, and fraternal groups.

"This is the direction of American life generally and Jewish life in particular," he told the New York Herald Tribune.

Since 1928, Rabbi Davidson has been rabbinical leader of the more than 300 families of Temple Beth Mordecai, in Perth Amboy, N.J., a Conservative congregation. From his experience there and on the national level he noted a shift in Jewish religious habits and status in recent years.

Years ago, synagogue educational forums took up such topics as foreign affairs but now "the members come to listen to unmodern, mystical, and specifically religious messages."

As recently as fifteen years ago, he said, parents "demanded a watering-down of religion" for their children. "Now there is more and more demand for intensive religious education," Rabbi Davidson noted.

The growth of suburbs has shifted Jews out of the cities into a new status, which he said, is very much like "the old communities of Europe." As in post-Biblical times, suburban Jews

Of The Hebrew University: A foundation to perpetuate the memory of A. H. Jasaby, who died in 1957, has been established at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem by his widow, Mrs. Bessie Jasaby, to be known as "The A. H. Jasaby Memorial Scholarship Foundation". The Fund each year in perpetuity will provide an undergraduate scholarship to a meritorious student at the Hebrew University. In announcing the establishment of the Foundation Michael G. Greenblatt, Q.C., national chairman of endowments and bequests, said, "Although pleasures and possessions were within his reach, A. H. Jasaby in his lifetime placed the greatest importance on human values. He was a humanitarian on the broadest level, and his interests embraced all human causes, all human needs, all human problems, great or small. The scholarships will serve as a living, lasting tribute to his good and noble name, and will from year to year be a great source of help and encouragement to Israel's future leaders."

Israel Bond Drive Conference To Hear Golda Meir

Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, vice-president of the Israel Bond Organization, who returned from conferences with Israel Government leaders, announced that Mrs. Golda Meir, Minister for Foreign Affairs, had accepted his invitation to address the national conference in Chicago, Ill., from Friday, September 18, through Sunday, to adopt a program for the fall campaign for Israel Bonds, which have provided more than $395,000,000 for the economic development of the country during the past eight years. Mrs. Meir, who recently completed a tour of South American capitals on behalf of Israel, will participate in the sessions as head of the Israel delegation.

Dr. Schwartz said that Israel's economic leaders headed by Finance Minister Levi Eshkol look to the Israel Bond drive to provide the resources to promote wider industrial production for export: "In my meetings with Mr. Eshkol and other financial experts, special emphasis was placed on the role of State of Israel Bonds in the exploitation of natural resources, the development of electric power, the expansion of the chemical industry, and the growth of industrial enterprises engaged in production for export. Israel's leaders believe that a sharp rise in receipts from Israel Bond sales in the United States in the coming year will be a decisive factor in speeding substantial improvement in the young country's trade balance.

"Our Chicago conference will not only celebrate the attainment of the $400,000,000 mark in Israel Bond sales, but chart a course of future campaigning to enroll additional tens of thousands of Americans and Canadians as shareholders in Israel's economic development projects."

Kaplan Calls On Leaders, Teachers To Guide Perplexed

Jewish rabbinical leaders and teachers were urged to reinterpret their traditional educational role to enable them to serve as "guides for the perplexed." The appeal was made by Dr. Mordecai M. Kaplan, a ranking Conservative religious leader and philosopher. He spoke at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, at an event held in honor of Dr. Kaplan, Professor of Philosophies of Religion at the Seminary, which also marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Seminary's Teachers Institute, says the New York Times. Dr. Kaplan, who just observed his seventy-ninth birthday, was the founder and first dean of the institute.

In his address before 1,700 persons, Dr. Kaplan deplored the Jewish rabbinical leader "who potters around with all kinds of activities except that of guiding the perplexed in his community." Dr. Kaplan said that the failure to guide the "perplexed" was "contributing to the apathy which is corroding Jewish life. And the teacher who does not try to convince the parents of the children he teaches that they must prove to their children their own devotion to Judaism is involuntarily fostering in the children a resentment against Judaism," he continued.

Follow The Harp To Israel

BY ERIKA GIDEON, OF THE ISRAEL GOVERNMENT TOURIST CORPORATION

"And it came to pass that David took an harp and played with his hand." (I Samuel, XVI.23).

If you should be on your way to Israel early in September of this year and should suddenly hear the plucking of stringed instruments in the air about you, do not be afraid that the sounds you are hearing are those of celestial chords and that you are already in the realm of the angels: consult the 1959 Calendar of Events in Israel and you will discover that the makers of this heavenly music are probably none other than the contestants coming to take part in the first international harp contest which will take place in Jerusalem from September 15 to 29 of this year.

This unusual musical event has been organised by the Israel Festival Committee with the aim of promoting greater interest in the harp as an instrument and in harp music in general. It will be the first official contest of its kind ever to be held and will provide a unique opportunity for talented young exponents of the harp, one of the earliest known instruments, to come together with other musicians and music lovers from all parts of the world, thus forming another link, this time through the medium of music, in the chain of international friendship and understanding. From the number of registrations already received, it is expected that over fifty contestants will take part: they will come from the Argentine, Belgium, Canada, Cuba, England, France, Holland, Italy, Poland, Spain, Switzerland, U.S.A., Venezuela, and Israel.

Languages and customs may vary, but the voice of music can be understood by all and its appeal is universal. And what more pleasing and melodious instrument to be the object of this, the first international music festival to take place in Israel, than the harp, appropriately chosen for its many and well-known associations with the Bible, where mention of it is made in both Old and New Testaments. It is, also, fitting that the contest should take place in Jerusalem, the City of David, with whose name the playing of the "pleasing harp" is most often associated. Many references to the harp occur in the Bible, usually at times of rejoicing, but the best known is probably the story of the shepherd boy David who found favour in the eyes of King Saul to whom he brought ease and comfort when he played before him on his harp.

In the subsequent period of history, Jerusalem fell to the Romans who preferred the lyre to the "barbarian harp" and since then the harp has not been particularly associated with this part of the world. The countries that, in fact, most readily come to mind at the mention of the harp are probably Wales, home of the poetic bards whose songs the harp used to accompany, and its neighbour, Ireland, both famous for their wealth of folklore and love of music. The contest can, therefore, be considered as an attempt to bring about in Israel a revival of the harp in its original setting amongst the rugged hills of Jerusalem, and for all who will come to Israel this year, whether to hear or to play, the harp will symbolise the past in the modern State of the present day.

And this is a state which is very conscious of all forms of culture and eager to play its part in the modern world of music. It is therefore hoped that this may be only the first of future musical events to take place in Israel, and that these should eventually become an annual feature in the calendar of events, forming an additional attraction to foreign visitors.

For the fortunate winner of the contest it will not only be a case of follow the harp but home with the harp, since it has been de-

Students Find Less College Admission Bias Now

Jewish students with excellent secondary school records face "no significant" discrimination in college admissions, according to a report issued by the American Jewish Congress. The report was based on the answers to a questionnaire sent this year to every seventh high school senior who sought a scholarship issued by the state Board of Regents.

The Congress received replies from 1,235 of the 4,641 students questioned. Seventy per cent were in the top quarter of their class, and 35 per cent actually received scholarships, says the New York Times. This sampling, according to the report, indicated that 74.0 per cent of the Jewish students were accepted by the college that was their first choice, compared with 84.7 per cent for Protestants.

The difference between the rates of acceptance was deemed to be "of no significance" for a number of reasons. For one thing, the report pointed out, Jewish students more often applied to the so-called "Ivy League" schools (38.4 per cent) than did Protestants (26.8 per cent). The report noted that these schools were more difficult to enter.

The Jewish students, it was also noted, applied more often to a number of colleges (an average of 3.1 applications) than did Protestants (2.4 applications). This, the report said, was either because the Jewish students feared that they would encounter difficulties or, perhaps, because they or their parents were more enterprising.

Replies to the questionnaire from Catholics were not considered comparable to those from Jews and Protestants, "since most Catholic students in the sample applied to Catholic denominational schools whose admission procedures differ from nonsectarian colleges."

The report said that this year's findings showed a marked improvement in the discrimination problem compared with similar studies in 1949 and 1952. Credit was given to the fair education laws in New York and Massachusetts, where the largest number of colleges covered by the survey are situated, says the New York Times. Because there were too few replies from Negro students, the report said, no analysis could be made of the effect of racial discrimination on college entrance.

Any symptoms of appendicitis should have medical attention. It is dangerous to give the patient a laxative or hot or cold drinks. He should rest until the doctor arrives. One of the symptoms is severe pain in the abdomen. All symptoms should be described to the doctor when calling him. His advice should be followed strictly.

Instead of serving too many soft drinks and rich cake at children's parties, more nutritious substitutes can be candies made from dried fruit and nuts, tasty sandwiches, and drinks of fruit juices, hot or cold chocolate or milk made glamorous with a favorite flavoring and a food coloring.

MARRIAGES

SOLES-AVRUSKIN

The marriage of Miss Arlene Avruskin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris John Avruskin, of Salem, Ontario, to William Lawrence Soles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Leonard Soles, 65 Strathearn Road, Toronto, took place at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, on August 25, at eight o'clock. Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg officiated, assisted by Rabbi Gene Klein, of Guelph, Ontario, and Cantor Joseph Cooper. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore an ivory-shaded gown of peau de soie, appliqued with re-embroidered Alencon lace. It was fashioned with a low, rounded neckline, short sleeves, and an Empire-waistline; and the full skirt was draped at the sides, shaping to a full, chapel train. A coronet of white chrysanthemum hearts and tiny rosebuds held her short veil; and her bouquet was a spray of white orchids and stephanotis. Mrs. Morton Glickman, cousin of the groom, was matron of honour. She wore jade-green taffeta, designed with an accentuated waistline, and two panels hanging from the back of the neckline, terminating at the hem of the full skirt. She had a matching taffeta coronet; and carried a sheath of gladioli and chrysanthemums shading in tones of gold-colour to flame and deep red. The bridesmaids were: Miss RuthEllen Soles, the sister of the groom; Mrs. Melvin Stone, Mrs. Boris Krivy, Miss Anne Ecclestone, and Miss Gay Avruskin, cousin of the bride. They were gowned alike in gold-coloured taffeta, in gowns made like that of the matron of honour; with coronet headdresses to match; and had sheath bouquets of gladioli and chrysanthemums to match. Debby Jeremias, of Hamilton, Ontario, cousin of the bride, was flower girl. Her dress was of turquoise-green organza, with a bow in the back. Her hair was arranged in crown-shape, with matching ribbon, and she carried a basket of flame-shaded and red chrysanthemums. Paul Robert Soles, brother of the groom, was best man; and the ushers were: Ted and Stanley Avruskin, twin brothers of the bride; Melvin Stone, Sheldon Hildebrand, Gordon Cooper, Richard Chaikoff, Dick Burge, and Frederick Irwin. The Synagogue was decorated with white gladioli and chrysanthemums, intertwined with smilax, before a background of tall, ivory-shaded candelabra. The wedding music was played by Gordon Kushner. At the Beth David Synagogue banquet hall, where the reception was held, the round tables were centred with tall white candelabra, with flame-shaded candles, topped with centres of flame-coloured flowers, from gold-colour to deep red. Mrs. Avruskin, mother of the bride, wore green peau de soie, styled with a full skirt, similar to that of the bride, with a large matching flower of the same material at each side of the skirt. She had a headdress of green leaves to match; and carried a clutch-bag with a bouquet of Tiger spray orchids. Mrs. Soles, mother of the groom, wore a golden-green peau de soie gown, the skirt of which had inset godets, finishing in a short train. She had a matching headpiece of floral petals, and carried a white spray orchid corsage. Mrs. Esther Goodfellow, grandmother of the groom, wore a champagne-shaded organza and lace gown, with a lace hat of the same shade; and a corsage of gold-toned roses. Mr. and Mrs. William Lawrence Soles are spending their wedding trip in San Juan, Puerto Rico. For travelling the bride wore a dark blue knitted dress; with a white hat, and a shoulder corsage of green spray orchids. They will reside in Toronto.

The Social Worker: A Modern Secular Priest

BY DAVID WEISS, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE BARON DE HIRSCH INSTITUTE, OF MONTREAL

Maimonides, the sage of the XIIth century, has given us a living tradition for modern Jewish and general social work. To this day we see many of his principles carried out in the practice of welfare and social work, both in the local domestic scene and in international activities. His "Eight Steps Of Charity" suggested various levels in the way in which people help each other and can be helped. His ultimate aim proclaims that people should be helped in such a way that they may become self-supporting. This is a cardinal principle in modern social case-work, and was seen in the Marshall Plan and the activities of the United Nations.

In his statement, Maimonides says: 'The seventh step is still more meritorious, namely, to bestow charity in such a way that the benefactor may not know the relieved person, nor they the names of their benefactors, as was done by our charitable forefathers during the existence of the Temple. For there was in that holy building a place called the Chamber of the Silent, wherein the good deposited secretly whatever their generous hearts suggested, and from which the poor were maintained with equal secrecy'. . .

Next to prevention, the Rambam therefore noted the primacy of the respect for all individuals to be helped, whether they be in need of sustenance for the body or the soul, or those who are emotionally lost or bewildered, and emphasized the importance of helping people to help themselves.

The social worker of today is the practitioner following in this tradition. The field of social welfare no longer is part and parcel of the religious community. While the profession of social work is no more than fifty years old, social welfare does go back to the earliest days of social formation, and is lost in antiquity when man first learned the principle and need of mutual aid. The Bible indicates the way the poor, the sojourner, the widow, and the orphan were to be cared for. The Temple and the later Synagogue were sanctuaries for spiritual inspiration and devotion and the material protection of the weak, the abandoned, the infirm, and the like. The practice of Tzedakah, and philanthropy evolved thus from antiquity through the Middle Ages.

In those early eras, it was the priests of the Temple, and the later Rabbis who administered and coordinated these mutual aid and welfare activities. As the Christian Church established itself, it also took on charitable functions and administered their welfare programmes through ecclesiastical persons.

Readers are in the direct line of descent, so to speak, of the benefits and liabilities and are familiar with the developments which occurred in social living as the result of the commercial and industrial revolutions of the last 200 years. As the Theocratic and Clerical States disappeared with the emergence of modern industrial and urban forms of democratic and political organization, so too did charity and philanthropy change increasingly into secular activities. The influence of religion, however, has been pervasive and has continued since the earliest days in welfare, as in education, legislation, and so on.

As the impact of these manifold changes take place, accompanied at the same time by vast changes in political and social organization, welfare thus became a function of voluntary and governmental bodies. As a result, responsibility for the administration of these services has increasingly come under the aegis of workers who have entered into this sphere of activity because of career motives. Those motives are inspired at the same time by the social and democratic ideals of our times, which emphasize the universality of public welfare, the rights and the importance of family survival.

Thus, what was once a religious activity, has now become secularized. Just as democracy has integrated and secularized the values of the Judaic-Christian culture in terms of the sanctity and dignity of the individual, the responsibility each citizen shares in the plight of others, so too has social welfare derived many of its philosophical concepts from religion in relation to the goals inherent in welfare programmes. However, as in political organization and structure, so in welfare, the ecclesiastical functionaries now carry very defined, sectarian, and specialized functions in our society. This is particularly true where Church and State are statutorily kept separate.

Into this developing field of social welfare, therefore, have come workers who, while not ecclesiastical in background, are moved by the self-same spiritual beliefs as well as professional training and conviction in helping people. The complexities of modern life in recent times have led also to advancements coming from the field of education, psychology, sociology, and political science. These fields have contributed to the training and knowledge of social workers who have to achieve specialized training to practice the various and unique skills that are required today of the professional helper, whether it is on a person-to-person, group work, or community basis.

In fact, the first professional school of social work was established in the United States some 50 years ago in order to meet this need for training. Today, there are 30 such schools operating in the United States and Canada. In Canada, approximately 75,000 men and women are involved in the practice of social welfare under public and voluntary auspices.

Social workers have thus taken on functions and responsibilities which in the past were carried on only by religious people. Today, social workers have in a deep sense become secular priests, serving society and the individuals in a manner and with skills their religious predecessors intuitively knew and practiced in a rudimentary fashion. But the spur for service and the reverence for life are still embedded in the training and attitude of social workers who are our modern society's priests. It is a profession in which young men and women who are looking forward to opportunities for a career or service to people can find personal and social fulfillment of the highest order.

Maurice L. Duplessis was the Premier of the Province of Quebec from 1936 to 1939, and from 1944 until his death, on Labour Day, September 7, 1959. This was the day when he was to have unveiled a Canadian Jewish Congress plaque at his home town, Trois Rivieres, honouring Ezekiel Hart, the first Jew ever to be elected to any legislature in the British Commonwealth, and also, Aaron Hart, father of Ezekiel, who, in 1759, was the first Jew to settle in Canada. This event was postponed. When these ceremonies will take place the absence of Premier Duplessis will be deeply regretted by the Jewish Community of the Province of Quebec.

U. S. JEWISH GROUP LEADERS

discussions with officials there before returning to Chicago.

American Jewish Committee representatives, including former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, held an "amicable but serious" meeting with Anastas I. Mikoyan, Soviet first deputy premier, when he visited the United States in January. They discussed the reports of anti-Semitism in the Communist countries with him and subsequently sent him a thirty-five-page memorandum documenting their charges, which was made public last August 8.

The report charged that Russian Jews "are subject to discriminations and disabilities which blight their daily lives."

Mr. Khrushchev is to arrive in Washington on September 15. As his visit drew nearer, members of the U.S. Congress and other prominent persons spoke out on what might be expected from the visit and how the Soviet Premier should be treated, says the New York Times. Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, said he could see no harm in inviting Mr. Khrushchev to address a joint session of Congress. He said it might be valuable for members to see what the Soviet leader looked and sounded like.

The New York Senator also said he would like Mr. Krushchev to hear a lively civil rights debate to "show him that we don't send our minorities to Siberia — we fight about what's justice for them and we do our best to get justice for them."

ISRAEL WANTS

Republic to change his stand. Mrs. Meir agreed that Israel's attitude was "creating a deadlock."

"But we do not believe that giving in to demands made by heads of governments without any legal right or moral right makes it possible in any way to unlock deadlocks," she declared.

The only recourse left to Israel is to take the question before the United Nations, Mrs. Meir said. She added that the Government had not decided whether to do so in the Security Council or the General Assembly. "This is a flagrant violation of the decisions of the United Nations and we are not ready to accept that the U.N. should pass over it in silence," she said.

However, even a favorable decision by the United Nations would be of questionable value to Israel. In 1951 the Security Council ruled that the ships of all nations, including Israel, were entitled to passage through the canal. The Egyptians have refused to obey this ruling, says the New York Times, maintaining that Israel and Egypt are still in a state of war and that the carrying of Israeli goods through the canal would endanger Egypt's security.

have come to regard their synagogue as having the threefold function of "a house of prayer, a house of assembly, and a house of study." Much non-home life in the suburbs revolves around the synagogue, he said.

Large city synagogues have reflected this interest by instituting religious education "almost entirely for adults," he continued.

Today nearly every synagogue, urban or suburban, has a vigorous activities program for youths between the Bar Mitzvah age of thirteen and young parenthood, Rabbi Davidson asserted. Teenagers are "asking philosophical questions" within synagogue life and "want the answers." More of them are studying Hebrew than in the past, he said.

With this revival has come a "growing recognition" of the United States as a three-religion country, with each faith having a contribution to make to its spiritual welfare, according to Rabbi Davidson, says the New York Herald Tribune. Government agencies are seeking to find out from such agencies as the Synagogue Council the part religion has to play in the advancement of peace and in the understanding of individuals and societies.

cided to award as first prize a new style 30 Princess Louise model instrument. It should be interesting to witness the reactions of the earnest customs officer who, on the arrival of the jubilant winner back at his home port, will put the usual question "Have you anything to declare?" and be faced with the unexpected answer: "Yes, a harp. I won it in Jerusalem!"

The Canadian Jewish Review is one of only 33 Audit Bureau of Circulations magazines in Canada; and one of only three published weekly in English. It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, and reaches a select consumer audience. It is received every Friday in the mail, and is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, to the able-to-buy homes, with high-ranking purchasing power as well as understanding and appreciation of quality and prestige in goods and services.

The Canadian Jewish Review is a Jewish community publication; it fills a real need, acting as the link between the individual family and the whole Jewish world at large. It is a community record; is informative about the important Jewish world news, and gives the trends in Jewish thought and social welfare in these changing times. It reports the organizational life of all ages in the Jewish group; and Jewish life in far-off communities, with items of interest to women appearing weekly.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
